

Tim Wright:

Tim Wright is a digital author and producer – walking is central to his creative work.

Notes from the podcast interview by Andrew Stuck: Recorded in November 2010 and published in January 2012 on <http://talkingwalking.net>

The interview opens with Tim describing the route of a Blake Walk he has devised beginning nearby to Waterloo station in London. Owing to the route we take passing beneath a busy railway line and beside heavily trafficked streets, some of the recording has a lot of background noise.

The Blake Walks

http://timwright.typepad.com/l_o_s/

The Blake Project is just off Hercules Road, SE1 in which local people are recorded reading Blake's work and several of his images are recreated in mosaics: <http://projectblake.org/>

More about William Blake: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/William_Blake

Tim is passionate about creating work through recording information digitally and reproducing it both on-line but also as booklets – he is an enthusiast for "Bookleteer"

<http://bookleteer.com/> a diffusion project created by Giles Lane at Proboscis
<http://proboscis.org.uk/> – why not join the gang of growing self-publishers?

Tim Wright's blog

<http://timwright.typepad.com/>

A bit more about Tim, in his own words: <http://timwright.typepad.com/main/about.html>

Kidmapped: <http://timwright.typepad.com/kidmapper/>

Recommended walks: North of the Thames to Tilbury Fort: <http://www.english-heritage.org.uk/daysout/properties/tilbury-fort/> South to the confluence of the River Medway with the Thames, a one time muster point for sailors now a prospective site for off-shore wind farms. <http://www.fortified-places.com/sheerness.html>